

CONCLUSION

We hope that in this time of transition for the District, this book will be viewed as a snapshot of what a number of engaged National Capital area residents want for the District now and in coming years. We also hope that this book represents not an end but a beginning of a process of engaging residents in constructive problem solving.

The Solving DC Problems Campaign website—www.solvingDCproblems.com—is available for the submission of further ideas. And in addition to allowing the submission of ideas, the website allows individuals to email their ideas or the ideas of others to public officials, and read and comment on all submitted ideas.

We know that the Fenty Administration plans to continue to seek ways to engage residents in this and other ways in the governance of the District. In the spirit of Solving DC Problems Campaign 2006, we hope residents take advantage of these open lines of communication.
